About Me

I am a motivated and analytically minded student with a strong passion for understanding how law operates as both a moral framework and a mechanism for justice. Throughout my A-Level studies, I have undertaken extensive independent research—producing essays of up to 5,000 words—on topics including the bail system, judicial morality, and the global interpretation of legal principles. My research has explored how evolving legislation reflects societal values, particularly in relation to fairness and accountability within justice systems

I am particularly drawn to criminal and commercial law that demand critical reasoning, integrity, and a deep awareness of the broader implications of legal decision-making
